Product-Specific Risks

You are exposed to risk associated with the biotechnology sectors.

The Underlying Fund tends to invest in the biotechnology sectors. These sectors may present greater risk and higher volatility than investment in a broader range of securities covering different economic sectors and tend to be subject to greater government regulation, which could have an adverse impact on the Underlying Fund’s performance. Single sector funds are subject to concentration risk and greater volatility.

The Underlying Fund invests primarily in a single sector, and as a result is subject to higher concentration risk and potentially greater volatility compared to funds following a more diversified policy.

You are exposed to risks associated with small and mid-sized companies.

The Underlying Fund may invest in small and mid-sized companies, which tend to have less liquidity and be more sensitive to changes in economic conditions and interest rates than larger, more recognized companies. As a result, the stock prices of small and mid-sized companies tend to fluctuate up and down more than those of larger companies.

You are exposed to growth stocks risk.

Investments in growth stocks can be more volatile and may react differently to economic, political, market and issuer specific developments than the overall market, especially over the short term. Such stocks may also be more expensive, relative to their earnings, than the market in general.
